

FOGGY NELSON:

I'm friends with Gary Feinstein in the D.A.'s office. I'll give him a call first thing in the morning, see where their heads are at. I'm guessing they're gonna puff their chests, but they have to know murder two's a risk. We end up at manslaughter, we get the right judge, maybe she's out in five to ten.

MATT MURDOCK:

We're not taking a deal.

FOGGY NELSON:

No, this is why they have deals, Matt. So the straightforward cases don't waste everybody's time.

MATT MURDOCK:

I don't think she did it.

FOGGY NELSON:

She's the sole suspect, found at the scene, covered in blood, with the murder weapon and no defensive wounds. If they offer anything it'll be a gift, and we will take that gift. We do not want this to go to trial.

MATT MURDOCK:

They don't want this to go to trial, either. Why hasn't she been charged yet?

FOGGY NELSON:

They have 24 hours. And it's the weekend. They're gonna take every last second to collect the evidence before they move.

MATT MURDOCK:

They've got the evidence. You just laid it out yourself. This is a good arrest, Foggy. We should already be reading about it in the papers. There's something not right about this case. I can feel it.
