

INSPECTOR

Your message said you have an address for me.

TOMMY

Anonymous tip off.

The address of Stanly Chapman.

INSPECTOR

You promised me Freddie Thorne.

TOMMY

This is instead of Freddie Thorne.

INSPECTOR

No deal.

TOMMY

Inspector, Stanly Chapman is a bigger fish than Freddie Thorne.

He is currently holding £200 in cash.

Given to the Communist party by the Russian Government.

That's right, Chapman has snow on his boots and all you'll need is a shovel. If he talks, you'll have proof. You might even get that medal.

Now, before I give you the address. I want your word that you will let Freddie Thorne and my sister leave the city.

INSPECTOR

Very well. You have my word.

TOMMY

I'd say our little truce is proving productive for both of us, Inspector. I get the information and protection and you, well, you get Bolsheviks.

INSPECTOR

But on a more pressing matter I'm afraid that Mr Churchill is becoming impatient . And I fear that if you don't give back those stolen weapons soon,

I will be replaced.
That would be the finish of me, that's for sure.

TOMMY

When my business with Kimber is done the guns will be returned.
That was the deal.

INSPECTOR

Then I am in your hands. Completely.
You hold all the cards. But I hope to God that my dismissal doesn't come before your decision to hand back those guns.
I say this for your sake, because if I were to be fired and it were your fault I would do things that would shame the devil. My fury is a thing to behold.
On my last day in power, for example, I would see to it that you and your scum brothers have your heads stoved in with mallets and spades.
And your sister too. That baby inside her would be of no consequence to me. The only one to be spared would be your little brother Finn.
He would however be lifted as a juvenile and dumped into that part of the adult prison where men have most appetite for boys like him.
That would be a dark day indeed, Mr Shelby.
If my dismissal comes before YOUR decision.
Do you understand? And know this, the clock is ticking.
